

Building bridges to make a child's life bear-able

The Enterprise — Michael Koff

Heartfelt hug: Alice Fowler, 82, a resident of the Northwoods Guilderland Nursing Home, cuddles a teddy bear that she is dressing to give to a sick child, as part of a Bridging People and Places program. The group believes hugging the bears is more important than dressing them because it helps the kids know people care about them.

Finishing touch: Beulah Carrington, 74, dresses a teddy bear that will be given to a child in need. Northwoods Guilderland Center Nursing Home is participating in the project, sponsored by Bridging People and Places, a non-profit group that connects people.
